Lipoprotein lipase (LPL) promotes the interaction of mononuclear cells with both high-density lipoprotein (HDL) and vascular endothelial cell surfaces through lipid-mediated cell attachment. This study addresses the question of whether LPL can alter lymphocyte homing. From our preliminary studies, it is known that HDL has three specific receptors, apolipoprotein E (apoE), LRP, and mannose receptor. LPL-deficient mice express significantly less apoE and LRP but not the mannose receptor. Since LPL deficiency resulted in decreases in a specific isoform of apoE (HDL2), we hypothesized that lymphocyte homing would be altered in the LPL-deficient mice. To test this hypothesis, we compared lymphocyte homing into liver and lung in LPL-deficient mice with that in apoE- and LRP-deficient mice. Experiments were performed with 5-day-old mice. ApoE-deficient mice expressed less LPL than wild-type mice but had similar LPL expression to LRP-deficient mice. In contrast, LPL-deficient mice expressed similar LPL to apoE- and LRP-deficient mice. Although thymocytes in the LPL-
