Hepatic adenomas in receptor ligands: role of CYP3A4 and their putative prognostic value. The aim of this study was to determine the level of the hepatic CYP3A4 expression in patients with hepatic adenomas, and to assess the potential prognostic value of this expression. Twenty-six patients with hepatic adenomas and ten control subjects were included. CYP3A4 expression was evaluated through immunohistochemistry using monoclonal antibody specific for CYP3A4. CYP3A4 expression was inversely correlated with CYP3A4 function as assessed by tacrolimus and sirolimus levels. The median age of the patients was 56 years and the median duration of the disease was 18.2 months. With respect to CYP3A4 expression, eight patients (30.8%) were CYP3A4 negative and 18 patients (69.2%) were CYP3A4 positive. There was no significant difference in serum concentration of tacrolimus and sirolimus between patients with and without hepatic adenomas; furthermore, no significant difference was observed in either treatment group regarding age or sex. However, patients who were CYP3A4 negative showed significantly more liver adenomas than patients who were CYP3A4 positive. After a median follow-up period of 36 months, six patients (23.1%) presented with a second hepatic adenoma. The degree of hepatic CYP3A4 expression could be used to differentiate between patients who will develop a second hepatic adenoma and patients who will not. Q: Horizontal and Vertical 09e8f5149f
