The in vitro biochemical studies show that N-methyl-4-phenyl-1,2,3,6-tetrahydropyridine (MPTP) reduces the activity of complex I (NADH-coenzyme Q reductase) while the activity of complex IV (cytochrome c oxidase) is unchanged. The affinity of the binding of [3H]-MPTP is decreased. When the enzyme was incubated with concentrations of MPTP in the micromolar range, a dose-dependent reduction of [3H]-MPTP binding was observed. The in vivo treatment with MPTP induces a delay in energy conservation. In vitro experiments with mitochondria from rat striatum indicate that MPTP directly inhibits the complex I activity as well as its reversibility. MPTP inhibits mitochondrial respiration, the effect being irreversible. The protection against MPTP is greater in complex I than in complex IV.Europe got a taste of good ol' fashioned security theatre last week when a woman was briefly detained by German police after submitting her new passport photo
