Ask HN: What does "not a YC/TechStars business model" mean - oxfordc I can see how a business model with a recession is bad timing is bad for an investor and 'has investors', but I don't understand what a business model that isn't covered by these programs is. For example, what does it mean that a business model that has angel funding and was bootstrapped isn't a YC/TechStars model? =====
djb_hackernews To me it means that the founders value their time over money. I say that's a good thing. Let me explain... Most of the work that goes into a YC or a TechStars startup is just to align their objectives with investors (VCs, Sequoia, etc.) It is just a process of meeting and saying "Well I would like to put together a new startup." And then "I would like to help you build a new startup." With that said the founders value their time much more than their investment. At least that's my take anyway. This is why I think that is a great thing.

Angel investors who spend the majority of their time raising money won't have much time to spend on a company building. The investors for YC and TechStars, for the most part, are not that type of investor. A lot of the reason that I think that is a good thing is because YC and TechStars are startups that I would like to be a part of. There are many things I would like to do that I can't because I have to spend all my time raising money. That said, I want to be clear... I do not think they are bad businesses in any way. I do think that most people who are looking for investors will have a bias for YC and TechStars because of their historic name in the valley and the fact that they are pretty well known. It is not a requirement. I don't think that most startups that bootstrap or raise from their own savings would be better off in any way. Angel investing and seed investing is more effective in the long run. ----- gmac Suppose there are two parties to the market: the sellers and the buyers. When buyers and sellers know each other and can interact without transaction fees, investors

A P-glycoprotein-multidrug resistant protein-ABC-transporter (ABC-T) plays a critical role in the transport of structurally diverse hydrophobic compounds across plasma membranes. The protein can be isolated from mammalian cells expressing a large numbers of ABC-transporters and reconstituted into proteoliposomes. This study presents the first reported purification and characterization of the bacterial ABC-transporter MarA from Escherichia coli. The purified protein is dimeric with a molecular mass of 55 kDa. The affinity for substrate (acetyl-CoA) was determined with a $K(m)$ of 17 μM and a $V(\text{max})$ of 48.7 $\text{nmol acetyl-CoA}/\text{min}/\text{mg}$. A protein with a molecular mass of 63 kDa was detected in the active complex. Surprisingly, the transport of CoA is not mediated by MarA. Moreover, gene deletion of marA does not cause any effect on acetyl-CoA or CoA transport.// Copyright (c) 2010-2013 AlphaSierraPapa for the SharpDevelop Team // //
