This course will provide a panoramic view of the field of technology studies and its sub-disciplines (ethnosectarianism, Social media, revolutionary technology, etc.). The course will help in exploring and understanding the complexities that are involved in the study of technology, its impact, and the process of mediating and documenting technology. Attention will be given to topics such as media, mediation, technology and cultural values, corporations, the commons, and education. A focus will be placed on the working world, followed by an analysis of the arts world as a composite of technology-based problems. Finally, the course will offer a global perspective of technology. Upon completion, students will have a solid foundation to pursue a professional or graduate level degree in information systems. This course will explore emerging topics in the field of engineering, with special attention paid to the social and cultural dimensions of technological change. The topics to be covered in this course will include privacy, online surveillance, the pursuit of work-life balance, disruptive technologies, and other current developments.Q: F# Interactive "done" command Does the "done" command work?
