1. Field of the Invention The present invention is directed to a connector housing having a removable cover and latch. The cover is used to provide a secure seal to the housing. More particularly, the cover is designed to secure the connector housing cover to the housing while simultaneously preventing the cable from penetrating the connector housing.

2. Description of the Prior Art A variety of cable connectors have been used in the prior art to facilitate interconnection of conductors. Typical of these connectors is a modular jack which is covered by a removable cover. The cover is generally held in position by a latch while maintaining a secure seal. The prior art connectors typically have a channel or indentation in a sidewall of the housing to receive a lip on the cover for holding the cover in position. As demand for transmission and transfer of more data at higher speed increases, there is a corresponding need to provide for larger electrical connectors that can accommodate more electrical conductors. To meet this need, the conductors are placed closer to each other and the housings are made larger. Placing the conductors closer to each other inside the housing results in connector housings that are larger as a result of the cable housing within the housing. Therefore, cable connectors are made larger to accommodate the larger housings. These larger housings pose a problem for cable connectors where the housings are larger than the cover or for cable connectors having a larger female terminal and housing. The present inventor is unaware of any prior art which addresses this problem and a need for a solution exists.
