Download and Run Daemon Tools..Two years ago, if you thought there was any chance that the world's number one football club could be bought by the owners of a British shopping centre, you probably belonged to a subculture of outcast minds. At a time when the Premier League's considerable riches are supposed to be indistinguishable from the river Ine, Manchester City came close to buying the entirety of the club they had been privileged to inherit by a combination of mischance and charity work. Two years later, it's far harder to see why they were ever called anything other than the working-class club that they have always been, even in this city of legend. Manchester City are one of the few English teams that can match clubs like Barcelona and Bayern Munich for the value of their own shirt. City have been a cash cow since the mid-1990s, when the club's billionaire fan owner the Manchester United chairman, Malcolm Glazer, decided that he didn't want the club to have a pension fund to take over once it became obvious that it would never be a world-beater. City's own "Asian investment fund" of Bahraini, Brunei, Malaysian and Hong Kong billionaires has seen the club awarded a staggering £1bn to build the world's biggest private stadium, in a move that threatens to leave it unable to afford to even play its own players. Inevitably, City's fans are now expected to endure a lot more than we thought we had to. Glazer's first steps were taken in November 2011.
