Comey was fired by President Trump on May 9, 2017, shortly after he refused to say publicly that he would not seek to influence the 2016 election by bringing the Justice Department over to his camp. Speaking Friday on MSNBC's "The Last Word with Lawrence O'Donnell," Bernstein said it's now crystal clear that Comey felt "compelled" to launch an investigation against Hillary Clinton as soon as she announced her presidential campaign in April 2015. "I've covered the Justice Department for many years and there's never been a case where a government official has felt compelled to commit perjury," the Watergate reporter said, adding, "It's been my experience that those people who are charged with criminal offenses tend to be more careful." Bernstein said Congress should continue to investigate the criminal investigation that Comey led. "The FBI is part of the Justice Department," Bernstein said. "You don't have the power to indict someone, you don't have the power to convene a grand jury. [The Justice Department] does not exist on its own."
