What's New in the Pristy Tools Digital Clock?

Objectively, the main aim of Pristy Tools Digital Clock is to provide you with the time you need, plus the day, the month, and the year. Beyond that, you're in control of how it shows the time. Background: Windows 10 and 8 are two of the most common operating systems around, so it's essential to have a means of reading the time even on the street. Configuration: Pristy Tools Digital Clock is not only designed to read the time, but also to show the time in a different style than the default clock in the Windows tray. Input: It's possible to configure Pristy Tools Digital Clock to stay on top of other windows, with both horizontal and vertical orientation, as well as transparency. The only options given are for the intensity, which can be adjusted between 0 (none) and 100 (full). Main features: There's no built-in option to set alarms. The gadget is lightweight, and with the default settings, it can run alongside the rest of your system. The time, day, month, and year are all shown, according to the system configuration. Support: The only required software is the gadget component. For Windows 10 and 8, this is already installed by default, but you can be sure that this won't be the case in your current OS. Configuration: The only configuration options are located in the gadget itself, and they're pretty basic. The application can be set to stay on top of any window, but the only options are horizontal and vertical orientation, and it's possible to adjust the intensity. Input: There's no option to set the day, month, and year that's shown, so the gadget will automatically display those dates, according to the system configuration. The Pristy Tools Digital Clock can be moved around on your desktop, though you can't control the style, color, and font of the boxes that make up the gadget. Main features: It's possible to configure the Pristy Tools Digital Clock to show the time as text, as well as the day, month, and year. The gadget is lightweight and can be set to stay on top of any window. There's no built-in option to set alarms. Support: The main component of the gadget is included with Windows 10 and 8, so you can't be sure that it's the case in your current OS.
