Editors' review RelatedQ: Converting multiple TIFF image tiles to one image I have multiple TIFF image tiles (say 10-100) with different regions of interest (ROIs) as input. I have an application that collects the ROI from each image tile and computes the feature vector of the ROI. I now want to fuse all the images together (regions of interest included) such that I get an output image that contains the feature vector of all the ROIs in the images. So, essentially I want the feature vectors from all the input tiles to be merged into a single feature vector. What is the best way to do this? The input is a GUI application, so we want to make the UI and the conversion to be as easy as possible for the user. A: If you have MATLAB and Image Processing Toolbox (I think it's a free download), you can do this in MATLAB pretty easily using a simple function. The code will do the following: Read each input file (with the same res/size) into a separate matrix Apply the function to each image's matrix, then aggregate into a final matrix If you want to do this in C++ or Python, then the code is the same. So let's say you have 10 images with a matrix of pixels and you want to create a single image with a vector of all the pixels in all 10 images. You can do that using the code below. (I used Python but it's exactly the same in C++).

import cv2
def tf_merge(matrices,
out_img_path, num_files): # Read each image's matrix matrices = [[cv2.imread(f, cv2.IMREAD_GRAYSCALE) for f in os.listdir(out_img_path)] for f in os.listdir(out_img_path)] # make a numpy array of all the pixel vectors all_pixels = np.asarray(matrices).reshape(num_files, -1) # apply function to each image's vector out =

cv2.stereoCalibrate(all_pixels) # save output matrix
CV
