A: Have you tried Ninite? It allows you to specify a list of applications, and it will automatically download and install them. You can also specify which language to install in as well.

A: There is something like it, although it's not exactly what you're asking for. I have not used it, so I do not know if it fits your needs, but you could try WinPackage Installer.

Tuesday, September 30, 2013 I have a lot of stuff I want to do! Besides drawing, I have a backlog of funny animal comics, I want to finish off Zootopia, I want to design/make a few things, I want to sew, and I want to get into roleplaying games! (Which, I have not played in a while, though I do enjoy playing board games and card games!) There's so much stuff I want to do! I want to do the things that make me happiest, and I want to do those things first before doing the things that aren't my passions. So I want to start working on my webcomic, and it's going well, I'm glad I did. I also have stuff to do about my family, things I want to get organized, and I'm super excited about that. I have so many cool things coming up for family in the near future! And, of course, I want to keep drawing and making fun art, doing cool things. I want to keep adding to my list of places to go, and I want to find new fun things to do! So that's what's on my list for the next week! Can't wait to start working on these things!

Q: Firebase Query - Realtime Database API - Security I am building an application that requires the data of an API to be inserted into a realtime database. I can easily query the database with the firebase method: `var ref = new Firebase(""); var query = ref.orderByChild('username'); query.equalTo('testUser').on('value', function(snapshot){ //stuff });` My question is, once I get the
